Hoist Failure Idles 700 Men

ISHPEMING - Over 700 miners at Cleveland Cliff's Mather mine have been temporarily suspended from jobs because of a mechanical failure in the mine's hoisting system.

A company official appeared on a Marquette television station Tuesday night with instructions to employes on how and where to signup for supplemental unemployment benefits.

Announcement of the shutdown was made by Ogden E. Johnson, industrial relations director for CCI. He gave no indication how long the mining operations will be closed, but said that company officers are conferring with manufacturing concerns to determine length of time needed for repairs.

The failure occurred within the surface ore hoisting equipment, Johnson said.

The mine employes over 700 men. Major portion of the crew will be killed. Maintainence work, however, will be continued. At present, Johnson said, operations at the Pioneer pellet plant at Lagle Mills where ore from the Mather mine is improved will not be affected.

Hunting To Come

Ralph MacMullan, director of the Michigan Conservation Department, was asked recently what the first reaction to the department's proposal of a $876 million 10-year program of conservation expansion for Michigan had been?

The plan was announced in November.

Since $278.5 million of the total would be income from new sources the program calls for a big change in public thinking about how much should be spent on conservation.

MacMullan thought that the first reaction to the plan had been generally friendly and indicative of support. The Michigan United Conservation Club, biggest sportsmen's organization in the state, didn't get out a tomahawk to use on the plan and that's a good sign, although the MUCC is a progressive element and apt to be out in front of public opinion a bit on conservation matters.

The 10 year program is an effort to package up the recommendations that have come out of planning for conservation. Like surgery that comes out of expert diagnosis, it's apt to be painful but good for the patient. Most of the planning is for facilities that will inevitably be acquired by the state. It is proposed that they be acquired now because they'll cost more later.

MacMullan said that it is impossible to foresee the exact future of recreation in Michigan, but that some conditions are virtually assured. The Upper Peninsula still doesn't believe in the population explosion because it has had so few evidences of it, but it is real and it will affect the future of the Upper Peninsula drastically in a relatively few years, he is cortain.

It would not, he thinks, be strange if a resident deer license were to cost $25 in the not-too-distant future. Along with the increased fee will come a shrinkage in the lands open to public hunting. It is unusual for a country with a population as large as America's to provide public hunting and inevitably as more millions turn to hunting and fishing for recreation the costs of providing them will increase and so will the restrictions.

Most of the Upper Peninsula is now open to public hunting, said MacMullan, but there is no assurance that this happy situation will continue.

The great demand for recreational areas is being used as a justification for public spending on forest rabbinical technique, the "mas- and culture, using parabolic part of its fulfillment, "Well since the gospels were set down ished since childhood. lands and hunting lands and park lands. The Misidle East is the "No. 1 tinderbox of the world" and Arab-Israel hostility should be the leading item of discussion netween the Soviet Union and the United States, Javits also told the American Israel Public Affairs Committee.
